Man receives award from Bush

By LESLIE BASALLA

Feb. 3, 2005

Air Force One landings are a television news staple. The coverage usually runs something like this: After the plane touches down, the camera cuts to a shot of the president exiting the aircraft and waving to news photographers. Then he descends a set of stairs to the tarmac, where he greets someone important.

Last Thursday, though, the guy at the bottom of the stairs waiting for President George W. Bush was Northfield Center resident T.J. Powell.

Powell was there to receive the President's Volunteer Service Award, a prize created for people who have demonstrated dedication to giving their time and talents for the benefit of others.

"The president came down and met with the governor and a couple of the state representatives," Powell said. "Then he came and shook my hand, thanked me for the service work I've done, and gave me a pin."

The pin is a small token of appreciation for years of voluntary work on Powell's part.

Powell is president and chief of the Northeast Ohio Medical Reserve Corps, an organization of emergency service professionals who volunteer their time to provide medical help at charity functions and assist other agencies during disasters.

The group was formed as the Northeast Ohio Public Service Volunteers but
